Dark Leaf Outlook

By BYB D. DAVIS
Virginia Marketing Agent

Sales of Virginia dark-fired tobacco began on Virginia's three markets on November 30. These markets are at Lynchburg, Farmville and Kenbridge.

Sales are scheduled for three days each week--Tuesday through Thursday -- for three weeks before closing on December 16 for the Christmas holidays.

The maximum rate of sale has been set by the Virginia Darkfired Marketing Committee at 600,000 pounds per day. At this rate, more than 80 per cent of the crop can be moved to market before the Christmas holidays. If growers market their crops this fast, a reduction in the rate of sale appears likely. The buying companies have indicated that they can handle about half of the crop before Christmas. The amount scheduled is about 60 per cent greater than the amount the companies indicate they can handle.

If tobacco moves to market faster than the companies can handle it, the marketing committee should reduce the sales opportunity. Congestion of the companies' handling facilities reduces their eagerness to buy the tobacco and this lowers the prices they are willing to pay for it. These markets must be operated in a way that assures each grower the maximum competition and highest price possible for his crop.

Booking Okay

Space will be reserved for those growers who want to "book" their tobacco. Growers who want to plan their sales in an orderly manner should contact their warehousemen to be sure that space is available and arrange for their sales.

In any booking system, it is most important for growers to deliver their tobacco on the day specified. Failure to do this upsets the orderly operation of the warehouse. Any grower who has booked space and finds he cannot fill the space should let the warehouseman know the situation as soon as possible. The space could be cancelled or reduced and used by other customers.

The latest estimate of production of Virginia dark-fired tobacco indicates that growers making reports to the Crop Reporting Service feel their tobacco will be a little heavier this year than last. The indicated yield per acre was reported as 1300 pounds on November 1. This yield is about 70 pounds per acre higher than last year and, if realized, will result in a crop of 6.5 million pounds -- about 5.7 per cent greater than last year.

Careful preparation for market is quite important in getting the maximum price for Virginia dark-fired tobacco.

Watch Order

Much of the tobacco is bought for customers overseas for a specific use in blending tobacco products. The customer is quite anxious to have a uniform pack. In many cases he does not have a good secondary use for leaves in a basket that do not meet his requirements for the primary use. Thus, the "pickings" are sharply lowered in value and his buyer on the warehouse floor has to be careful not to buy baskets that do not carry a high percentage of tobacco that will meet the standards for his primary use.

Another factor that oftentimes lowers the price for Virginia dark-fired tobacco is its order. Tobacco that is wet or in unsafe order must be processed quickly to keep it from damaging. The price buyers are willing to pay for this tobacco is usually discounted sharply to reduce the risk of losing a part of the tobacco. This is a difficult problem for growers and they are urged to be careful in preparing their tobacco to see that it is in the proper order on the warehouse floor. If it is too dry, many of the good qualities don't show up.
